The Manhanset Stakes of $2,000, at five furlongs, called a small field of two-year-olds to the post. Jack De Mund was a 6-to-5 favorite, with Green B. Morris's Sombrero ond choice at 9 to 5. Opening at 7 to 1, Dolce Far Niente was backed quietly all over the ring until his closing price was 6 to 1. To an inferior start Sombrero and Jack De Mund quickly raced away from the others and travelled neck and neck to the turn ncer kept Dolce Far Niente in third place and then made a great bid for the lead. The Hanever colt responded nobly and in the straight he readily passed the two leaders and galloped home an easy victor by three lengths in 1:02. It was a hard finish for the

The confidence of the talent, so severely shaken on Tuesday and Wednesday, was partially restored when Julius Fleisch-mann's Smart Set turned out to be a winning mann's Smart Set turned out to be a winning favorite in the first race. It was a contest in which maiden two-year-olds were asked to go five furiongs, with the weights ten pounds below the scale. Smart Set looked so tempting that the layers were unwilling to offer more than 6 to 5 in the first chalking, and as the money came in rapidly the glosing price was even money. G. Whittier was second pick at fours and Nugget was steady at eights. It was Smart Set's race from the moment he left the barrier. Shaw did not have to exert himself, and yet the Fleischmann colt won galloping by eight lengths. Stack whipped Nugget into the place by a neck in front of G. Whittier.

When the betting began on the second race, a selling affair for three-year-olds, at about six furlongs, the talent concluded that Albert Featherstone's Maister was the master of the field of twelve that went to the post. Accordingly, Maister was quickly made a even money favorite, with Spry, Bluff and Carl Kahler fancied as outside chances in the order named. It was the same as a boit of lightning from a sunny sky, therefore, when, as the flag fell to a poor start, M. C. Homan's Hengist, at 100 to 1, was seen out in front running as if he had winged feet. Nobody believed that he would stay in the lead, though, even when he was three lengths in front of Mauga, Is to 1, at the three-furlong pole. But when he was still setting the pace by a length and a half at the half mile, with Mauga, Malster, Carl Kahler and Bluff following, heads apart, there were some in the crowd who saw breakers ahead. In the stretch Landry, seeing that he had a chance with Hengist, went at him with the whip, so that the Teuton colt struck his second wind and in a corking drive won the race by a head from Bluff. Barring a few straggling dollars there was no betting on the winner.

Acting as if stunned or dazed by such a blow, the regulars, with their usual pluck installed Ten Candles favorite, at even money, to take the third race, a handicap for three-year-olds and upward, at one favorite in the first race. It was a conte which maiden two-year-olds were asked

HAD A DOLLAR ON HENGIST. Gaunt Man Backs the 100-to-1 Shot and Creates

During the running of the second race at Gravesend yesterday, a tall, gaunt man, with long black hair and haggard features walked nervously up and down in the grand stand. He had bet a dollar on Hengist at 100 to 1 and his pockets contained loose change, a bunch of keys and a railroad ticket to town. When the horses got under way. the man asked in a hoarse whisper of a little fellow, who was looking at the race through "Say, who's shead?" "Hengist, a plug," was the reply, which was steeped in tones of disdain,

"Come on, you Hengist!" growled the gaunt one "Come on" "He ain't got a chance on earth," said the little one. "He's a skate and the dope'll carry him to the turn, then he'll blow up.
"Come on, you Hengist!" again the gaunt one wailed. "Come on!"
"The nag is three lengths ahead now," explained the small man, "but wait until Malster and some of the good ones get at him."

"Come on, you Hengist!" exclaimed the gaunt person, running his hands through his snakey locks, "You can do it, I know you can.
"He's stoppin' now." the little fellow blurted. "He'll fall in a fit!"
Hengist was at the top of the stretch and Landry was drawing his whip when the tall person, still yanking at his hair, fairly screamed:

Landry was drawing his wind when the person, still yanking at his hair, fairly screamed:

"That's it, Landry. Give it to him, and give it to him good. Lay it on. Oh, you Hengist! Oh, you Landry!"

Then he paused for breath and strained his eyes at the leader, which was running neck and neck with Bluff.

"Landry!" he yelled, his eyes bulging out of their sockets. "Landry! Oh, Landry!" It was a wail that made the man's neighbors turn about and cast fiftul glances at him.

"Landry!" It was similar to the cry of a drowing man. It was repeated in rapid succession until Hengist had flashed passed the judges stand, winner by a head. Then there was a crash and the gaunt man fell over backward in a chair. He sat there looking off into space for several moments, his right hand jingling the loose change in his trousers pocket. The man was in a trance, apparently, but he soon awoke, and arising he walked hurridly to the betting ring to cash. Ten minutes later, with a bunch of money in his ciothes, he left the track in a brown study. He was possibly on the way to a drugstore for a nerve tonic.

Gardner, There was a rattling finish in the Empire State Steeplechase Handicap over the full course of about two miles and a half. The veteran Dr. Eichberg was a strong 8 to 5 favorite. Thomas Hitchcock Jr.'s Red Path was second choice and Passe Partout third in demand. There was also quite a plunge on Westown at 10 to 1, that proceeded to set the pace for three-quarters of a mile. Then Passe Partout. Walter Cleary and Dr. Eichberg went ahead of the others. On the second time around Walter Cleary stumbled and nearly went down. Mara skilfully got him going again, but he was out of it. The finish was a startling drive, Passe Partout getting to the wire first by half a length. George Keene was second, a length in front of Dr. Eichberg. Westown broke down and limped home.

Colt Said to Have Heart Disease and Is Prac-

This conclusion was reached yesterday when Garry was worked a slow mile and pulled up, bleeding more than he did in the Premier Stakes on Saturday. When Garry Hermann first bled a week ago, it was said he was only troubled with a cold, and that the hemorrhage was due to a ruptured blood vessel in the head, which would soon heal and not affect the speedy coit in any way.

In his next work-out he again bled, and when started in the Premier Stakes on Saturday last it was no wonder the bookmakers took such liberties in laying 3 to 1 against his chances. Veterinary surgeons declared that he was sure to bleed if put to any exertion. Their predictions came true, for he was affilted with a hemorrhage and pulled up last.

At times Garry trembled and his eyes had a dull color instead of their usual brightness. Horse doctors were called, and after a thorough examination declared their belief that the colt was suffering from heart disease and liable to drop dead at any moment if he received too violent exercise. Since the latest misfortune it is said Capt Brown, who paid Charles Head Smith $20,000 for the thoroughbred, has about concluded to retire the colt altogether and save him for the stud. BROOKLYN, 4; PITTSBURG, 1.

PITTSBURG, June 6.— Brooklyn's champions, patched up for the occasion, broke the Pirates' winning streak to-day and won handily. Manager Clarke had his regular team in action with Phillippi on the rubber and was confident of success, but his club was lucky to escape a shut-out. It scored its only run on two singles. Wagner's steal and a base on balls in the fourth inning. Capt. Kelley reported sick with stomach trouble, and his inability to play gave Hanlon a serious problem to solve. The manager finally decided to put "Lefty" Davis in right field and try at third Willie Keeler, who played that position in the old days at New York and Brooklyn. The shift was a happy one, as Keeler gave the best exhibition that has been given at third this season by aBrooklyn player. He soon made The Pirates stop bunting and handled the hard-hit balls with ease. In the sixth he cut off a run by catching Ritchey's liner and touching third base for a double play. In the seventh he figured in another double play that helped Hughes out of a hole. His good work was generously applauded. An error, by Ritchey, Sheckard's single, Daly's double, which was just inside the right line, and an out at first scored two runs for Brooklyn in the first. Ely's bad throw and singles by Davis and Sheckard snogled in the fifth and went to second on a passed ball and scored Brooklyn's last run on Daly's liner to left. Fine fielding did much to hold down Pittsburg's batting, but Hughes' did his share of that work. He made a strong finish, striking out two of the last three Pirates at bat. The score:

At Harvard and Princeton the bands went along with the cheers all through the game, although Harvard kept her demonstration entirely on the fixed stands, and noise alone could interfer with the game. There are a great many people who would like to see this custon toned down in the interests of fair play and the fixed stands. It will be done away with sooner or later, and we would like to see Yale lead in the reform of cheering."

The final scores were: Braid. 309; Harry Vardon, 312: Taylor, 315

H. H. Hilton was fourth with a score of 320 Not since Willie Auchterlonie won at St. Andrews in 1893 has the open 'championship of Great Britain been won by a Scotchman H. H. Hilton, the amateur, won in 1896, and in the other years to date the winner was having scored three victories. Hilton also won the open at Muirfield in 1892, making a score of 305, and when it was last played there, in 1898, Harry Vardon scored his first win, after a tie with Taylor, with 316. The Muirfield links has a playing length of 5,896 yards, and the record is 72, made by "Sandy" Herd. The links is the home of the Honorable Company of Edinburgh Golfers.

Braid was born at Earlsferry about thirty years ago and his win will serve to disprove the saying that no one may hope to win fame in the open after he is "young and twenty. A cousin of Douglas Rolland, in his time the greatest of cleek players, Braid has the same tall stature and grand physique. Rolland, the late Jack Simpson, who won the open in 1884 at Prestwick, Bob and Archie Simpson, and a half-dozen other noted golfers, were fellow-townsmen of Braid at Earlsferry. They form a school of masterful, daring and almost reckless golfers, noted for their long play with either driver or cleek, and possessing a splendid evenness of mind that make them grand match players. Jack Simpson and Rolland at their best were held to be the masters of all with play-club or cleek; and Braid, whose style of address greatly resembles theirs, has long been famous for the carry and length of his tee shots Abroad Braid is always referred to as the 'slugger," but the term does not do justice to his style, for he has a grand follow through At the top of the swing there is not the "heeltapping" of the St. Andrews and Musselburgh players, and, in the grip, there is no interlocking of the fingers, as with Vardon and Taylor, and the left hand is held somewhat loosely. Mr. Everard, the St. Andrews critic, has published this analysis of his game:

"Braid is equally good in score play and in match play. Even when the prospect looks most dark he plays to the end with dogged, resolute determination, throwing dogged, resolute determination, throwing away no chances through faintness of heart, or because the end may be near, but showing pluck, resource and dash up to the last putt. Genial imperturbability is the keynote of his character.

"However roughly luck may treat his ball to a rude buffet on or off the green, however badly a good shot may be punished, even when the stroke merited the kindest treatment, Braid remains impassive at the stroke of fate. There is no dashing of the club on the ground, no 'naughty little cuss words,' no soporous lament into every year, no abatement of forceful striving to retrieve the punishment. That is the temperament of the ideal match player; and it is one of the main sources of Braid's strength as a player. But along with this essential attribute which all our great players have in a more or less degree, there go two other qualities in the case of Braid a judicious compounding of caution and brilliant dash—sometimes looking to the spectator perilously like recklessness. Braid is cautious in all the shots he has to play. He examines the lie of the ball, the line and the hazards to be cleared when the match is going smoothly, or when the scoring is well on the par level. But when the adversary begins to rivet the chains of bondage on him, then there is an awakenling, and the game is forced for all it is worth. Everything is risked—the most formidable carries, and the longest and most tricky puts for the hole; and though both the cantious and the bold policy are practised in score as well as in match play, frequently in the same round, according to the state of each game, it is rare, Indeed, that Braid comes to absolute grief, or hands in a card with a high total.

"The impression which a spectator gathers from Braid's play is that of tremendous power. Standing a good height, with a long reach, every scrap of advantage which these aids give him over the ball is utilized to the utmost. The swing of the club is a pretty full one, and it comes round from the back of the neck on to the ball with a swish of lightning rapidity. Braid stands to his ball rather more 'open' than either Taylor or Rolland, and he is evidently endowed with great muscular power in the arms and wrists. He plays with light clubs, not heavier than seven ounces we should imagine, and he drives a long ball of low trajectory. This end is attained by a depth of face on his bulgers amounting to nearly a couple of inches, while the face of the club is brought forward in front of the shaft somewhat like the blade on the Fairlie cleek. The shaft of the driver is therefore very nearly midway between the face and the lead at the back. In the hands of a player of such power, who rarely schaffs, one can see how it is he gets such long carries in a high wind, and he we had and how the initial velocity, as well as the low flight of the ball are so great. Both in his approach play and in his putting he is pretty sound and consistent, though, like most of us, be occasionally misses the short puts."

Braid played with success as an amateur until 1892. In 1894 he became the professional at the Army and Navy Stores, in London Afterward he was the coac now for some years he has been at Romford, one of the best of the greens near London. While at Oxford he best our first open champion, Horace Rawlina, who was on a flying trip to England, by 7 up and 3 to play. Braid was ninth in the open championship at Sandwich in 1894 and every year since he is as been in the placed division, Mr. Hilton on eating his out by a courle of strokes for 18st honors at Hop lake in 1897, but this is the first time he has won. During the absence of Vardon and aplor in this countrileat year Braid led the stay-at-home processionals. He plused in thirteen matches, won eight lost four and halved one. This year Vardon beat Braid in a match at Seaford, by 2 up and 1 to play, and he has played well up in the contests between the "big four," Vardon, Taylor, White and himself.

Not one of the principals concerned in the charges affecting the amateur standing of Walter J. Travis and A. G. Lockwood in the June number of Owting had any statements to make yesterday. There was a good deal of talk over the matter among golfers about the city and, on the face of the statements, the sentiments were in accord with the remarks made by R. H. Robertson, the U. S. G. A. President, as reported in THE SUN of Thursday. In brief, the opinion was that the Out ng article was unwarranted by the facts.

Caspar Whitney, editor of Outing and the writer of the paragraphs in question, who was seen yesterday, would not recede in the slightest degree from his position. "The matter is one that I have gone into very thoroughly," said he.

"It would be futile to make such grave charges unless I possessed the evidence to back them up. I do not care to enter into a discussion in the newspapers; but I will state that all that has been charged against Travis and Lockwood is true, and, further, that there are facts concerning Travis's membership, or connection, with the Garden City Golf Club that are not creditable to an amatour. My only interest is in the purification of amateur sport; it is not my place to press forward with my evidence, but should the charges be taken up by the U. S. G. A., the facts I have collected are at its service.

NEWBURGH, June 6—Joseph Chadwick, Jr. and E. A. Jova, both former club champions, had a very stiff match in the first round of the semi-annual championship at the Powelton Club to-day, the former winning by 4 up and 2 to play. John Smith beat Sydney W. Lockhart, by 1 up: Wettereau beat Hilton by 4 up and 2 to play, and James S. Taylor beat Gilman P. Tiffany by 3 up and 2 to play. To-day Taylor plays Wettereau and Smith meets Chadwick, the survivors playing at thirty-six holes to-morrow in the final. BALTIMORE, June 6 - Split heats were the order of the day at the Gentlemen's Driving Park this afternoon. In the 2:18 trot Annihilator was picked to win, but was distanced in the fourth heat. Roberta and Ballerton loomed up, but Merrefield, behind Millard Saunders, had something up his sleeve. He laid up for two heats, and then went out and won in a walk. "Honest Old" Garth, behind Ellie, justly carried off the Garth, behind Ellie, justly carried off the money in the 2:28 pace. It appears a shough Hartzell was laying up for a hog killing with Golden Rod. So apparent was this that in the fourth heat the judges put Lake up behind the gelding. As a result he gave the winner a hard drive for the money and showed speed not before seen in the race. The 2:35 trot for read carts for non-professional drivers was declared off. Summaries:

Bel Esprit and Cobwebs Win Speedway Brusher -Board of Review to Meet. brushing on the Speedway yesterday afternoon They were attracted by the announcement that John F. Cockerill's Swift and DeWitt C. Flanagan's Ivandorf were going to try conclusions. The latter, as it developed during the afternoon, was not slated to start against Swift, but the fast gelding Bel Esprit had been selected by Mr. Reilly to contest with the Cockerill gelding Both horses appeared to be going well and the footing was excellent. They got away to a fair start tas the first heat and made a driving race of it all the way down. At the Point of Rocks it looked as though Swift would be the victor, but Bel Esprit held gamely to his work and won out by about a length. When they wictor, but Bel Esprit held gamely to his work and won out by about a length. When they started for the second and last heat Nathan Straus, driving famous old Cobwebs, joined in and the brush was really between him and Bel Esprit.

They made an exciting contest of it. As they neared the finishing line they were so close together that it was impossible to tell which had the better of it. Both drivers urged their horses to do their utmost and the result was one of the closest and most exciting finishes ever seen on the drive. Cobwebs just managed to show his nose in front as they flew past the line. Swift was two or three lengths behind.

The only other brush of importance was a gruelling one between the gray mare. High-land Lassie and Dr. Moore's mare Vera G. The latter won the first heat by little more than a nose and the second by about half a length after a pretty drive. A number of the regular brushing brigade speeded back and forth and there were several contests of minor importance.

Secretary W. H. Gucher of the National Trotting Association has issued a call for a special meeting of the Board of Review to be he'd at Hartford on Thursday, June 27. While the board is empowered to act in place of the full board with the same authority and jurisdiction at this meeting and may consider business virising in all of its districts, it is more than probable that the meeting is called for the purpose of reconsidering some of the decisions made at the recent meeting in this city and which has caused such a whirlwind of criticism, among them the case of Vance Nuckals of Cleveland and the horse Arch W. the Bertie R. case and the record of Harry Deveraux's stellion, John A. McKerren. Very few, if any, of the decisions ever handed down by the board have ever provoked so much adverse criticism as the three mentioned.
